

What does it mean to be human in a posthuman world, one shaped by technology and AI? This volume explores how legal and cultural texts grapple with visions of a future in which the existence of humans and machines is ever more closely entangled. Through analyses of seven fictional texts, including novels and films, it traces emergent conceptions of the human in the age of technology.

THE SERIES: LAW & LITERATURE

The interdisciplinary series Law & Literature systematically examines correlations between literature and the law. The studies presented in this series analyze the complex interrelations between two cultural spheres that have not only contributed to the basis of Western culture and society but also share a common focus on texts. Bringing together contributions by jurists, historians of law, legal philosophers, and specialists in literary and cultural studies, this series reflects a rapidly growing area of inter- and transdisciplinary research in Europe as well as in the United States.
